The crowd of applicants for naturalization papers was much larger to-day than day since the ante-election rush

Crowds of would-be American citizens gathered about the doors of the County burt-House before they were opened at Court-House before they were opened at 1 o'clock this morning and waited patiently in the rain in order that they might obtain advantageous positions in the line.

Several of the political organizations of the city had detectives scattered through the crowd to try and discover any attempts on frauduent naturalization that might be made.

mandamus, and had not been represented by counsel.

When the arguments were over Justice Barrett said he had read Judge McAdam's opinion when the mandamus was granted, as he did not propose to issue an injunction that would reverse Judge McAdam's ruling. Justice Barrett said that if such a course was followed, it would bring about a clash between the different courts and judges.

He said that if Judge McAdam had stred the proper course for Campbell's counsel would be to appeal to him for relief. He then formally denied the motion for an injunction.

"Tim" Campbell, accompanied by his lawyers and friends, left the court-room and went to Judge McAdam's chambers to appeal to him to reverse his ruling.

When Judge McAdam returned to the Court-House, Lawyer Green and several of Campbell's friends went to his private chambers and asked him to give a rehearing to the proceedings on which he granted the mandamus in favor of Simpson, Judge McAdam refused to rehear the case.
